This performance by the Syrian-born and Cambridge-based artist Issam Kourbaj was created to mark one decade of the Syrian uprising. It was performed and livestreamed on 15 March 2021 – the tenth anniversary of the first day of unrest. Filmed during the second COVID-19 lockdown at The Howard Theatre at Downing College, Cambridge, it was watched live across the world. In collaboration with the composer Richard Causton and the soprano Jessica Summers, as well as Kettle's Yard, The Heong Gallery and The Fitzwilliam Museum, the original performance also coincided with the artist's display of 366 eye idols created from Aleppo soap (Don't Wash Your Hands: Neither Light Agrees To Enter The Eyes Nor Air The Lungs, 2020) at the Fitzwilliam Museum (2 December 2020–5 September 2021).

In March 2021, Kourbaj said:

“To mark the tenth anniversary of the Syrian uprising, which was sparked by teenage graffiti in March 2011, this drawing performance will pay homage to those young people who dared to speak their mind, the masses who protested publicly, as well as the many Syrian eyes that were, in the last ten years, burnt and brutally closed forever.”

The recording of this performance will be screened in multiple locations worldwide, including cultural institutions and churches across the UK, Europe, Middle East and USA, throughout Refugee Week (20–26 June 2022). The ash produced during the original performance will also be installed in a glass vessel next to the screen at selected locations, including St James's Piccadilly, London, and Great St Mary's Church, Cambridge. The performance will also be available to watch virtually on associated websites that will be accessible to anyone unable to make it to one of the physical locations.

The idea of screening it in multiple locations and on the internet reflects the diaspora of many Syrians forced to leave their destroyed homes and erased cities, who are now scattered across the world, while the glass jar of ash casts light on war's terrible continuity (even when it is no longer mentioned in the media) and the destruction of all cities and livelihoods, which we see repeated time and again (as is now tragically happening in the Ukraine) and throughout human history.

About Issam Kourbaj

Issam Kourbaj was born in Syria and trained at the Institute of Fine Arts in Damascus, the Repin Institute of Fine Arts & Architecture in Leningrad (St Petersburg) and at Wimbledon School of Art (London). Since 1990, he has lived and worked in Cambridge, becoming an Artist-in-Residence, a Bye-Fellow (2007–11) and a Lector in art at Christ's College, University of Cambridge. Kourbaj's work spans many disciplines – his interests stem from his wide-ranging background in fine art, architecture and theatre design. His artwork include paintings, works on paper, sculptures, film and performance pieces, and he frequently collaborates across the creative sciences and humanities. It has been exhibited and collected widely; for example, a collection of his sketches, Sound Palimpsest, was acquired by the British Museum in 2008 and exhibited in their display Iraq's Past Speaks to the Present. Kourbaj's piece Dark Water, Burning World, is currently touring several museums in the UK and is in the collection of Pergamon Museum and the British Museum. It became object 101 in 'A History of The World in 100 Objects' when former Director of the British Museum Neil MacGregor was asked which object would best encapsulate our modern age. Kourbaj created new performances for the exhibition Actions. The Image of the World can be Different at Kettle's Yard in 2018, and has been dedicated to raising awareness and funds for projects and aid in Syria through several exhibitions, installations and performances in the UK and abroad. In 2021, he was invited to curate and create work for a large-scale art installation called Fleeing the Dark in response to and inspired by objects from the collection of the Tropenmuseum in Amsterdam. Kettle's Yard and The Heong Gallery (University of Cambridge) are collaborating with the artist on a major two-venue exhibition of the artist's work in 2024. www.issamkourbaj.co.uk

About Richard Causton

Richard Causton (composer) has been described as “one of the most courageous and uncompromising artists we have”. He studied at the University of York, the Royal College of Music and the Scuola Civica in Milan, studying with Franco Donatoni and his music has been heard all over the world, thanks to performers such as the BBC Symphony Orchestra, Philharmonia Orchestra, City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, Sinfonieorchester Basel, RundfunkSinfonieorchester Saarbrücken, London Sinfonietta, Birmingham Contemporary Music Group, Britten Sinfonia and the Nash Ensemble. Issam Kourbaj, Eye idols and Arabic Graffiti, ink on paper, 2020 His music often challenges the performers to reach unusual realms of expression to achieve his intentions. Richard is currently Professor of Composition at the University of Cambridge. www.richardcauston.com

About Jessica Summers

Jessica Summers (soprano) has performed around the UK both in concerts and in opera. An alumna of the Britten-Pears Young Artists Programme (Contemporary Performance directed by the late Oliver Knussen) and New Vocal Repertory courses (directed by Jane Manning), Jessica has performed twentieth and twenty first century music in a wide range of venues and festivals including the Three Choirs Festival, Holywell Music Room, Oxford (Pierrot Lunaire), St John's Smith Square, Brighton Festival, York Late Music Festival, King's Lynn Festival, Dartington Hall, Ripon Cathedral, Science Museum (London) and the St Martin in the Fields New Music Series. She has sung in several tours for English Touring Opera, for Opera North (Education) and for the Royal Opera, Covent Garden. Jessica is an ardent supporter of refugees and those who have been displaced. She is a former orientation volunteer for the Red Cross Refugee Unit in London and continues to volunteer, fundraise and raise awareness of the current global refugee crisis. www.livingsongs.co.uk/artists/
